Background of the FDP

The higher education system in India is facing a lot of opportunities and challenges. Indian institutions now will start facing competition from foreign universities as they establish campuses in India . In this rapidly evolving landscape, it is important to develop leadership in academic institutions in India to create an environment to foster innovation, excellence and holistic development. The service performance of any academic institution is deeply anchored on the faculty member's capabilities. The NEP 2020 also emphasizes on the importance of skilled faculty members in higher educational institutions. Since private sector also plays a significant role in higher education sector of India, capacity building of teaching faculty of such institutions for enabling them to become future leaders is a need of the hour. With this objective, Faculty Development Program (FDP) on Academic leadership in Private Higher Educational Institutions is designed to equip faculty members from private institutions with the necessary skills and competencies to excel in both current and future leadership roles. The program focuses on developing technical, managerial, and interpersonal skills essential for effective leadership in shaping the education landscape for future generations.
